

THE PROPAGANDA FACTORY, OR SPEAKING OF TREES

Marc Vincenz

Argotist Ebooks

* Cover image by Inga Maria Brynjarsdottir

Copyright © Marc Vincenz 2011
All rights reserved
Argotist Ebooks

* EarthMen © Inga Maria Brynjarsdottir

THE PROPAGANDA FACTORY, OR SPEAKING OF TREES

POST NUCLEAR LOVE CHILD

She'd often say if you'd never lived through the war you wouldn't sense the world as the fragile creature she is, like the lone butterfly, the bird or the mouse wagging tragically across all those blank distances.

& during the Blitz, blackout night after night the family's sleep interred yet reinforced in rebar, the sky falling in pieces as the radio crackled White Cliffs of Dover & rain never left rainbows, not even on Sundays.

As a child, I imagined it was like listening to stars forming, the creation of galaxies, a romantic notion which sizzled out there in my own cranium. Normally, at this point he'd interject, thick glasses resting stork-like on the end of his bent nose like an afterthought; invariably he'd be glued to his Telegraph as he vowed to be ahead of the Times; he'd say, Ah, the world in metaphor, a mouse caught in the headlight of the solar glare, no grandfather clock with its soothing tick-tock, no farmer's wife with her carving knife, just millions of rodents scrapping for a bite of heavenly paradise. Where the hell's that Pied Piper?

She'd roll her eyes in cosmic circles, then get on with knitting woolly caps for the grandchild or niece, or even some old bat roosting in the nursing home down the road.

Years later, it's too late to ask them about the war they've gone quasar, dematerialised into the subatomic; today a fifty-megaton mushroom cloud splutters plutonium across a Soviet sea of ice, & a nude named Natasha lies spent, flushed pink, dozing beside me, as I stare into the dark, the world is surely a tragedy, but outside a haze of butterflies flickers against the moon.

SPEAKING OF TREES

~

Ah, what an age it is / When to speak of trees is almost a crime...

—Berthold Brecht

FOR THE SHADOW COUNCIL,

history has no future it's more testament than tenacity more tenement than transience an illusion of Earth standing on its head like the old codger who collects in the underpass connecting and the late cars squawking overhead and what of the rusty cup and the mangy dog?

obligatory for a man who fights for poems by firelight and she never once reincarnated she who smells of forgetfulness and TV dinners she who carries the cart to the hypermart for dented cans and cold cream and he he with the scar under his left eye the crewcut and the crescent and teardrop tattoo always crying to the moon always ready to die and on the way home to the other side where beer was once served lukewarm she another she carries the touch of men's hair and fingers filaments of inbreeding breathing through layers and skins reeking of old men's fables of survivors and war heroes and though their ghosts have vanished shadows still drag behind like bats transmuting along the corridors swooping above flagpoles lining the concourse with their indelible silence

MONKEY BRAINS

We ate monkey brains in secrecy just to see what they tasted like, as if they might remind us of you; and although the ancient custom was to strap the chosen primate in a made-for-measure cabinet with only the shaved cranium exposed, crush the skull-bone with a golden hammer, while she screamed and whimpered, begging for the beginning of time; an experience, I've been told, like no other, we proffered them fried in garlic and onions separated from the body, dipped them in rice wine vinegar.
You got sick after that, struggled with fever for ten days and nights, dampening the sheets with your toxins.
I knew you'd live.
You wanted to die.
I remember the morning your fever broke was the morning the H5N1 virus flamed across the country, everyone was wearing a blue mask and we no longer feared the secret police.

CONVEX

Mosaic of fly's eyes.
Compound light in pixels. Pinpoints.
Water is nervous un-distilled, refracted strip-stressed colours bent into meniscus, goose-bumping.
When sun is served days from now I shall see you again in a clean light.
Numbered.
In your own image.

BICYCLE

They say I have a face like a bicycle & I wonder if from the front or the side

I guess it's a compliment since they ride them along the canal & when the sun settles & the crane flies

Sometimes I watch the men soldiering home like they've been to a wedding they've never had trailing ribbons of paper from the burn of the machine & on the women from workshop number nine plastic confetti sprinkled in their hair like tiny little confessions floating behind

One of our small perks is the after-shift dinners boiled rice, & bok choy & dry fish heads which my HR lady tells me is far better than what they normally get but little am I to know, I'm merely transposed: a colon sent from the board to point the way ahead

In nine solid months and forty-five thousand fish heads we've reached all targets; we've out performed

Kim Yung Boiled Meat Sticks
Emperor Wu's Golden Fish Cakes

Yes, indeed it's a miracle. The trick, of course is in the distribution & getting them to appreciate that only milk from free-range Western cows could settle the stomach of the Chinese working man could enrich the Ch'i so early in the morning could steady the hands on the lathe &, above all, making it available on bicycle carts outside every single factory in every single province

Cream of Feng Shui Awaken the Tiger Within

A yoghurt for the enlightened Free Range, healthy and keeps you slim

& I wonder, as my term comes to an end, as I sit here listening to each section manager praising my achievements

& the flowers & the toasts at the banquet table what they will think of the next face whether they will see him as a traffic light or a conveyor belt or a chair or even a cart

THICK END OF A CAMEL'S TAIL

Gobi creeps into big cities flecks under human nails she has her way of smoothing things down to the nature of themselves her hard glass grain like blood hungry mosquitoes purple-haired housewives in Saturday-starched window-shopping dresses fit for an all night & day Ganbei wedding in fifteen pearl embroidered wedding gowns & a dowry fit for a chairman but when they finally stumble home barefoot in the pitch giggling like foxes heels swinging ribbons of cigarette smoke float like ghostly Christian halos

& when the Bactrian camel snorts for summer Mr. Hua is still bicycling after all these years he chews my tender lamb skewers milk-fed on the Tarim basin (where Beijing's tested atom bombs) he loves to hear himself humming revolutionary songs above the wallop & squeal of Benz & Beemer diesel gives his shashlik just the right Atheist bite he's pedalling to the Executive Council behind banners & slogans & waves to Ayi Lui with the peonies & roses & apple blossoms as the lamb unfolds on his pointed tongue he wipes his crystal-sewn eyes & he stumbles into his conference hall where he who knows who wags for whom

BLACK SKIES

The sun bottoms out and they rise again,

air-tumbling whorls, screaming four-letter words.

When our backs are turned they go straight for the warm blood, dying their beaks

in our carbon dioxide, clicking their beaks like mad scissors.

Joseph says their magic is in the feathers, he calls them quills that ink the skies.

I say, strange they bleed cold.
But, Ah—respite,

he with the bow and arrow, he with the eyes

in the back of his head, he with the illusion of time.

MANCHURIAN FOG

Beijing December.
Clouds like steel wool, buildings buffeted all along the Dong Wen Men, ravaged traffic and smokestack-snowflakes swirl like the aftermath of a nuclear storm; all this before lunch, all this before the fog.
The world is almost visible, living shadows dulled by frosted glass.
But here in your garden, the bamboo creaks, and the cars become the breath of the city, soft and harmless, like rain upon the tiles.

The noodles you serve are hot and sharp and taste of your distant mountain homeland, of the pine trees and the coarse flour in your mother's kitchen of the wood from her chopping board.

You suck your noodles like a great heron his worms, splattering sauce over your new pink blouse, and when you smile, your teeth have turned blood red.

And now the world disappears again, and your eyes dark as burned charcoal and you throb like an incinerator in my head.

BARBERS

In 1915 I carted combs, scissors, razors, clippers, ear-cleaners & Brilliantine in slippers.
In Autumn, this same alley was littered with hair & leaves & chicken bone.

We barbers had a monopoly on the head business in the good old days.

If you weren't sporting a Manchu Queue we'd report you, & off with your offending head.

Now barber shops line alleys from Harbin to Shentou, & red & white candy poles make you dizzy; & to truck drivers, salesmen, sailors, chancellors on the fly country girls offer quick head with one hand on a tube of Johnson's baby oil.

But enough chit-chat.
Let me finish my chicken soup.

ADVANCED TREE PLANTING

Comrade Fa says:

Grassroots democratic politics is like water:

You have to channel it to stop the flooding:

The people have to know they're getting something for all their back-breaking work.

SEEPAGE

& when you Piotr stared at me unflinching point blank offered me a malt whiskey with or without a splash your wife puckering new lips on champagne said it's all leeching under the foundations can't let the shareholders know or the factory would close I just smiled back & cheered our good health—

The world was big & cancer was everywhere in the meat, in the bread, the sky, the unflinching earth only in Iceland will the volcanoes get you & then there was factory kingpin Ying with the blue phone glued to his ear—he who rose from the communist earth through the state-owned fields of wild flowers past the guards of imperialism into the bright future of capitalism

He who bought a house for his father then down the line all the way to his second no, third, cousin, uncle to his sister's second half-brother

No one outdoes the law
No one fulfils all moral obligations What the hell do we have lawyers for?

To find a way in without arousing suspicion Along the way, be a dog if you need to wag Be a whore of you need to get fucked

Above all, let nothing get in the way of your own hands of progress One day sooner or later you'll need your own whore It helps to break the monotony & thus it was, came to be that effluents surpassed basic constituents to life Jupiter coming out of the other end of the tap leaking like an old man's dribble in his dirty underpants & you both said by the time anyone noticed you'd be retired enjoying life, a garden of herbs & flowers good food somewhere on a Pacific island with parrots & deep sea swordfish & clear blue cloudless skies until the final day of passing

That night I was all fuzzy on vodka as a girl with watermelon breasts almost screwed me half to death

KEY

I might have been a radio, once—collector or broadcaster of selective sounds and tones, I was a rambler of definitive points.

Some listened, most didn't.
Except in the car where you couldn't turn me off.

Even in the parking garage with the key jangling in your palm, the chain twirling a disco ball.

It was then you said:
Don't you think we've had enough?
And you were right, of course.
There are only so many things you can say.

Sometimes you'd purse your lips, clasping your purse like a wall, asking:
Do you want to tell the whole world?

Which was rhetorical.
These were the only sounds that moved me to bee-static, a slow whir that rang in my ears, these, and that look in your eye which was enough to put an end to most things.

But that was so long ago, before we went public.

It is worthy of remark that a belief constantly inculcated during the early years of life, whilst the brain is impressible, appears to acquire almost the nature of an instinct; and the very essence of an instinct is that it is followed independently of reason.

—Charles Darwin

WALL

This is the wall that contains history, he says, kicking the brick with his boot.

Without her we would have become a kingdom of small-thinking.

She has made us, contained us, distilled us into a hard liquid, the protectors of seas and rivers; has given us our edge over the encroaching barbarians who incessantly beat at the gate.

This is the wall that holds in innocence, he says, the purest nature of ourselves.

She is the only man-made structure you can see from the moon.

Isn't she a wonder?

NO BIRDS

~

The need for illusion is deep.

—Saul Bellow

NO BIRDS

Early Shanghai mornings, window unzipped, Hard tinny noises titter & trill & honk, Shatter & ripple, yet, nowhere do sea birds skim:

No trash-pan kittiwakes, no lonesome terns fading In mussel-caught pinpricks of sky dust, Not a single sandpiper clowning carnival eights.

The wind smells burnt, sulphur-singed hot, Charcoaled, as if he has been lying about everything, Entirely unattended on the smoke-oil steel of wok.

Some Tarzan cleans the dizzy horizon with dirty rags, Arcs pendulous on a single thread of corded hope.
Minutes later, memory wiped, window squeezed tight.

Inside, pigeons squirt bombs from the ceiling, Grebes nest in my hair, a peacock struts the kitchen pecking crumbs & the fattest phoenix of them all sits right here in the bath, Preening, plashing away all that murky ash and dust.

Hear it? She's singing, as if in heaven.

TAISHAN MOUNTAIN

On Taishan Mountain behind the fog we wait for first glimpses of dawn.

It's here, hovering on China's precipice, the Chairman proclaims the East is Red, deems himself ruler of all he beholds.

I'm standing right beside him.

We've just fought a war, he's so thin, and he has this steely glint as if he's stumbled across some great illumination.

It's a moment of connection with the universe, a revelation beyond normal human comprehension, something to make history, like Einstein unravelling the universal laws of energy and mass and motion.

In this moment I know nothing will ever be the same again.
I know he has to tear the world apart at the seams, fold it back upon itself to find his true place in it.

Everything for love, he says.

He breathes in, as if trying to capture the last essence of olden sky, and as often, he considers one of his heroes, Karl Marx, and what that bearded wonder might have said on a day such as this, in a definitive moment such as this.

And you won't believe it, but he turns from the spectacle of nature illuminating before us, the hills, the valley, the forest below and faces me full-on, grabs my head in his smoky hands and plants a huge, wet kiss on my lips, then says: We've all got to move on. You know, Richard, you've got to get rid of that damn moustache.

XIAO HONG' S GREAT LEAP FORWARD

Tradition says: Women are grass.
Tradition says: Women are born to be stepped on.

We burn our schools and books to the ground.
Teacher Liu looks like a stork in a dunce hat.
Red Guard Pang beats him silly with bamboo.

Chairman says: Brothers and sisters are equal.
Chairman says: Women uphold half the sky.

Hot fire is red, blood is red.
We don't need entertainment.
Our theatre is played out on the streets.

Chairman says: Without destruction no construction.
Chairman says: Be red. Don't be an expert.

When I'm twenty-one I dance chest-to-chest with Chairman in the park.
My heart leaps for joy, I nearly faint.

Chairman says: Melt hot steel in your back garden Chairman says: Stoke a furnace beneath your apple tree.

And we become scarecrows, we kill the sparrows for our Great Helmsmen, for they are the scourge of the fields.

Chairman says: Revolution is not a dinner party.
Chairman says: Make the future new!

Comrade Pang lights Chairman's Panda cigarette.
Up close he smells of lotus flowers.
I wish I could kiss him on the mouth.

Chairman says: He is the sun that never sets.
Chairman says: These are the best years of our lives.

And my heart grows redder and redder and redder.

RANGOON

for John Adolphus Pope

City at the end of strife far from the cry of borstal whippersnappers.

I do remember the milky tea & the triangular cucumber sandwiches.

Mother calls her ladies an outpost of the foreign legion & pours with abandon as if this may be her last cup yet.

She offers slices of homemade fruitcake & waves away the flies.

Father sells opium to appease her majesty, Queen Victoria and please poor Chinese fishermen.

Sarah and I play croquet on the lawn.
(She always wins.)

A hundred years from now a junta will oppose everything we've made from scratch.

I say Praise the Industrial Revolution but observe the gaping hole in our constitution.

Monkeys can scream all they want at the pagoda burning on the hill, but the moon is still gone.

What an embarrassment.
You know, you can never please the natives.

BASE PAIRS

old Shanghai drags her feet from screw top jars so she can avoid the bite just to have a pee comes in slow spurts when taxis brim with umbrellas but buildings still rise the elevator
never smiles & your tealeaves the seventeenth floor to cook a steamed fish! for the pan to heat the gas is always grumbling of the hammer drill in apartment 1804 of Tibetan Yaks up there with their green and white bricks they jostle & prod & poke my, my you're fatter than ever, or is your granddaughter still not married? you're about to win again sips hot tea holds herself for hours of the heartless bathroom which anyway on rainy days men beat each other senseless & the woman who mans with a flick of the switch except when your grocery bags burst spill all over oh the trouble the time it takes to wait the water to bubble & the thump and grind sounds like a herd at sunset Auntie and Uncle arrive of Mahjiang saying things like:

that's not your real hair colour, is it? or but you rub your hands together & soon there will be all this

SUZIE LAM SCORNS THE HAPPY MARRIAGE DATING AGENCY

Toes

Twenty-something Suzie Lam, my dirty-weekend fling, tells me identity is a fickle thing, says everyone grows up wanting to be a cowboy or an astronaut, when all we really need is to cross a river without getting wet. Suzie wiggles her black-nail-polish toes and spoons herself Häagen-Dazs straight from the tub.

For some reason she likes to eat in bed.

Husbands

If you don't know who you are how can you go find a husband who can walk straight on two feet? When you want to grow up, you've got to shed your skin. Yes, I've become quite a snake she says, and hisses. In my case it was a shabby straw hat, parents who couldn't write or read and a cat named Ding Dong who was afraid of mice. In Szechuan everything trembles beneath your feet so there's nothing really to stand on. Hong Kong, on the other hand, is built on promises.

There's a dribble of ice cream on her chin and I'd love to lick it right off, only I know she wouldn't go for that.

Words

I used to keep a diary, all my history narrowed down to a thin disguise. Now only what's still to come serves a purpose. At the dating agency there's no such thing as a happy marriage. Normally the men arrive in a taxi, sometimes with a bunch of peonies, hair greased back into a quip. They know if I'm not interested, I just tell them let's just be friends then. I've never finished a single date.

She licks her fingers, fluffs her pillow and stares at the fan on the ceiling.

Chatting

The QQ Chat Service is an excellent thing, the internet draws a higher class of men. Most Chinese marriages are not built on love, you know, but I'm not willing to compromise, not just yet.

Besides, I know you'd never leave your wife.

THE RIVER, ONCE

once she went to quench then she went to scrub now she collects dead toads grinds them with cornmeal to feed her sows once she ploughed the land toiled with her face deep in dark soil her back burning in hot sun now she works in the paper mill making laminated labels for the city sundays she takes a out boat not to take in the view or dream but to gather plastic bags now she drinks from water bottles carted here all the way from the city label reads: pure filtered glacier water and says it's drawn from a mountain it reminds her of a spring at the foot of a sleeping dragon

SEAFILL

Remember the birds for their seasons ecumenical spires, nails hanging on country dales clanging of Sunday sermons falling asleep at the pyre, burning the waste of reason wilted down to the disfigured deposit of carton, plastics & rind. Sea's bride a floating PET as an island.

Last haven of migrations, soiled footprint embossed eternal in a billion bottle caps: three in the landfill two in the hand one on the glorious ocean.

[ * * * ]

The world is watercolour blue.

We tack up the coast in our chrome-polished eighteen wheeler, she and I and our millions of lives encased in slatted hives, layers of egg and worm and honeycomb.

She's white-washed white almost ceramic, laid-out-for-dinner in that dandelion dress.

I'm greased back in hand-me-down dungarees, beguiled by her whiteness and hungry for sunlight.

We're both growing electric from the inside.
At Las Almendras the full-fruited almond trees whisper and our bees are listening, dancing dutifully, filling in the blanks with sucrose.

Three miles downwind she and I breathe sea barefoot among the dunes.

She wonders if the missing nut-brown tourists are across the other side of the world and if a song or a word has carried them elsewhere.

This is the first time I understand that our bees are mindless slaves toiling for the world's sweetness, but these afternoons in a beach house we paramour on chardonnay reclining, salt-soaked and shimmering in sand crystals like diamonds.

On the fourth, before turning back into the panhandle highway, we find our hives abandoned, beeless.

There is not a yellow soul in the trees, in the flesh of the skies or scattered on the earth's surface.

She says now they're free and palms the last queen, pops its head like a ripe berry on a twig hums a midday song of remembrance and loss and I curse the scientists for what they have done to the trees.

The world is watercolour blue.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many thanks to the following publications:

Poets and Artists, MiPORadio, ntb position, Stirring, Pirene's Fountain, Rumble, Ducts Journal, Lantern Review, Poets' Corner, October Babies

“Thick End of a Camel’s Tail,” “Seepage,” “No Birds,” and “The River, Once,” were previously published in Upholding Half the Sky (GOSS 183: Casa Menedez, 2010)